Thank you to everyone who attended Take Your Agency to the Next Level on January 30, 2009! This year's event was another success, with the overwhelming favorite session being "Ask the Geeks", where Jerry Fetty and Bryant Caudill answered a wide-range of technology and automation questions.

Not only did attendees walk away with a wealth of information and guidance from SMART I.T. Services, many left the seminar with some great prize giveaways!

Here's what a few attendees had to say:

Our intelligent phone system reports that, on average, you spend one minute less on hold by dialing direct because you eliminate unnecessary call routing through the receptionist.

For the fastest service possible, call our main phone number (586-258-0650) and press 1. When prompted, enter your PIN number to be routed to the first available S.M.A.R.T. Services system administrator.

"Very informative and presented very well."

Joe Yeager, Schafer Agency Inc.

"It's really great to see what is coming in the future. It really helps with planning."

Ron Gaffney, Cambridge Underwriters

"Another top-notch program! Thanks for the great information."

Economic Woes Present an Increased Threat of Data Theft

McAfee, maker of antivirus software and intrusion prevention solutions, stated that companies worldwide lost about $1 trillion to intellectual property theft and damage repair in 2008. This staggering statistic, which the company asserts is conservative, is based on a survey conducted by Purdue University's Center for Information Assurance and Security.

McAfee warns that a weakened worldwide economy will only increase data theft in 2009.

"Companies are grossly underestimating the loss, and value, of their intellectual property," said Eugene Spafford, professor of computer science and executive director of Purdue University's Center for Information Assurance and Security. "Intellectual property is a form of currency that is traded internationally, and can have serious economic impact if it is stolen."

Experts expect the threat to IP to worsen this year as the global economy worsens. The two main threats seem to be cyber criminals and "financially challenged" employees. While 39 percent cited outside data thieves as their biggest concern, 42 percent were worried about "displaced" employees looking to improve their situations by selling off vital corporate information.

"Companies need to stop looking at security as a cost center but as a business enabler," concluded Dave DeWalt, president and CEO of McAfee.
